London Strikers in Some Cases Resort to Intimidation.

[illegible] of [illegible] Day

PITTSBURG, Pa., September 2.—Labor day was celebrated in western Pennsylvania to day for the first time. Business was generally suspended, but the only public demonstration in this city was a parade of the United Carpenters and Joiners Brotherhood, in which 200 participated. Picnics were held by other trades at Greensburg. Local labor organizations and granges paraded. Afterwards a monster meeting was held, at which addresses were made by prominent labor leaders favoring an eight hour movement. In the coke region the works are generally idle. A large mass meeting was held at Scottdale.

NEW YORK, September 2.—Labor day here was ushered in by bright sunshine. From early morning the streets were crowded by the sons of toil. However, numbers of working girls were trodding along as usual with lunch in their hands. In a majority of [illegible] they were found working in cigar factories and other concerns, the owners of which had no respect for Labor day. On the east side many factories blew the seven o'clock whistles. All exchanges are [illegible]. A procession, which was not as large as last year's, was greeted all along the route by enthusiastic crowds.

BOSTON, September 2.—The observance of Labor day was more general than heretofore. Business was entirely suspended. A procession was the feature of the day.

CHICAGO, September 2.—Labor day was observed by two processions, one under the auspices of trades and labor assemblies, the other Knights of Labor. Both marched through the streets, then proceeded to picnic grounds outside the city.

KANSAS CITY, September 2.—There was no general [illegible] of Labor day [illegible]. There was a parade participated in by carpenters in the [illegible].

ALBANY, N. Y., September 2.—Labor day was celebrated by a parade of 8000 in line, reviewed by Governor Hill. There was a picnic in the afternoon at which the eight-hour [illegible] was discussed.

CINCINNATI, September 2. The observance of Labor day was obstructed by rain.

PHILADELPHIA, September 2.—Delightful weather favored the first [illegible] observance in this city of Labor day. Banks and exchanges closed, also nearly all mills and factories, and other business establishments [illegible] in the afternoon.

DENVER, September 2.—Labor day was generally [illegible] observed here to-day. All the banks, state and federal offices and business houses [illegible]. A [illegible] parade composed of all the organizations of the city formed upon 14th street with a number of handsome floats and marched through the city to the picnic grounds, where the day was spent in speech making, dancing, etc.

DETROIT, Mich., September 2.—Labor day was very generally observed here to day. Knights of Labor paraded the streets and picnicked at Schuetzen park. There was a [illegible] at the Detroit Driving Club grounds this afternoon, when the eight hour question was discussed.

INDIANAPOLIS, September 2.—In spite of rains which fell at intervals during the day laborites had a very creditable parade, and this afternoon large mass meetings were held at two different points in the city.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 2.—Labor day was observed by trades unions in this city, though business was not suspended. A parade was held in the morning. Probably 8000 men were in line. A majority of the men carried small American flags.

TOLEDO, September 2.—Labor day was observed here by a general cessation of all business. The parade was large and [illegible].

ST. LOUIS, September 2.—Labor day was partly generally observed here by trades and labor [illegible]. A large procession of trades unions paraded the streets and repaired to Concordia hall, where an immense picnic was held.

KANSAS CITY, September 2.—Dispatches from points in Kansas state that Labor day was generally observed throughout the state.

OMAHA, September 2.—Labor day was celebrated here by a procession composed of 3,000 trade unionists, followed by a picnic in the park.

EVANSVILLE, September 2.—Labor day was observed by the general closing of mines and business houses. A parade two miles in length was one of the features, over five hundred miners beside military and secret societies being in line. At the ball park prominent speakers addressed thousands of people.

NEWARK, N. J., September 2.—Differences in the Knights of Labor caused the labor parade here to be a failure. The knights had for orators Master Workman Powderly and ex-Governor Abbett. Mr Powderly hoped Labor day would soon become a national holiday.

PHILADELPHIA, September 2.—At the [illegible] of the picnic given in celebration of Labor day the United Labor League sent a cablegram to Burns, leader of the London strikers, tendering greeting and sympathy.

MONTREAL, September 2. To-day was [illegible] a legal holiday and members of the various labor organizations to the number of 2000 paraded the streets to the Champs de Mars, where sports were indulged in.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., September 2.—Labor day was fittingly observed here, a large concourse of working men parading and afterward repairing to a park where they listened to addresses and topics of interest to them.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., September 2.—National labor day was appropriately celebrated. There was a general suspension of business and a large parade.

NEW YORK, September 2.—At a mass meeting at Cooper Union in favor of the eight hour movement tonight resolutions were adopted sympathizing with and pledging financial aid to the London strikers.

The Great Strike

LONDON, September 2.—The great strike is still in force. Neither side has made a move yet to-day. There are signs of crumbling among the strikers over the division of relief funds, but the men generally stand firm.

Three thousand tailors struck this morning and are parading the streets.

DUNDEE, September 2.—The trades union congress here adopted resolutions of sympathy with the strikers and called upon the various trades of the United Kingdom to render all possible financial support.

LONDON, September 2.—Information was received by the police that Burns to day urged the strikers to proceed to the docks and expel the men working there.

LONDON, September 2.—The dock companies are better satisfied with the aspect of affairs. They have increased the number of men at work including some of the strikers. It is asserted that there is a split among the strikers and that a committee has been appointed looking to abandonment of the strike.

Rochester coal whippers and lightermen visited a large number of vessels in the river and forced the men to quit work.

BLACKBURN, September 2.—Three thousand looms have been stopped owing to depression of trade.

LONDON, September 2.—A mob of 800 strikers invaded Albert docks this afternoon and compelled the workmen to quit.

LONDON, September 2.—A deputation of ship owners waited upon officers of the dock companies and urged them to give shippers power to make their own arrangements with the men for the discharge and loading of vessels. The chairman of the docks committee appealed to the owners not to press their request, as to grant it would be impossible without conceding the points which the companies are fighting against. At a meeting of wharfingers a resolution was adopted advising the strikers to accept the dock companies' offer.

LONDON, September 2.—The government is employing convicts to unload vessels in the Midway. The Star has collected 2500 pounds for strikers' funds. A dispatch to the Star from Melbourne, Australia, says at a meeting there to day 1500 pounds was collected in behalf of the strikers.

LONDON, September 2.—Mrs Gladstone visited the scene of the strike yesterday and gave a check for the relief of strikers.

[illegible] Beef

CHICAGO, September 2.—The senate committee to investigate the relative rates on dressed beef and live cattle, met here to day. Senators Vest, Coke and Farwell were present. [illegible] managers were called to testify as to the [illegible] rat [illegible] Elgin, Ill., dairyman testified that the dressed beef business had entirely changed the conditions. Local butchers no longer slaughtered, but bought dressed beef in Chicago. Cattle to be sold, must be shipped to Chicago.

Mr. Larkin of Elgin read figures showing an alleged [illegible] in the price of live cattle since the year 1880 from $84.75 per head to $18.04. Then he made a slap at the railroads. He complained that dealers throughout the country were refusing to buy live stock, preferring to order dressed beef from Chicago. The idea brought out was that the freight tariff on live stock was higher than on dressed beef. Thus smaller dealers considered it to their advantage to buy in Chicago, and this, according to Mr. Larkin's notion, left Chicago control of the live stock market.

A number of other witnesses, principally commission men, at the Union stock yards were examined to night. Thomas Brown, a dealer in export cattle, said: "Years ago we had plenty of buyers, and if a man could not get his figure here he went on to New York or Albany. Railroads stopped this by crushing out these shippers, and the wrecks of many of them are to be seen about the stock yards to day. The dressed beef trade has killed live cattle dealers." Brown said dressed beef men were not frightened by pluero pneumonia. [illegible] Europe would not take live cattle the price went down and they were benefited accordingly. Portions of beef that could not be disposed of otherwise, he said were used in canning.

Sold at Auction

SHEEPSHEAD BAY, September 2.—Before the races began to day, Col. Bruce sold at public auction in the paddock adjoining the grand stand, a number of thoroughbreds belonging to Bryant & Scoggan and the Locust stable. The star of the sale was three year old Proctor Knott, winner of last year's Futurity. The first bid was $10,000. Bidding went along at a lively rate until $17,000 was reached, at which figure he was sold to W. A. Ferris, who represented Mr Scoggan. Scoggan thus became sole owner of the horse. Details are as follows: Come to Taw, M Kelly, $5,250; Proctor Knott, W. A. Ferris, $17,100; Robin Hood, Porter Ashe, $1,900; Jakie Toms, D. A. Honig, $850; Hindoocraft, G. A. Tompkins, $11,700; Bettina, W. A. Ferris, $1,250; Jaja, S. P. Ewing, $1,650; Cerchus, G. B. Morris, $4,000; Remembrance, Beverick stable, $900; Prince George, S. W. Street, $2,150; B. R. C. yearling by Sensation, dam Memento, W. O. Scully, $1,250; Jackson, B. Lehman, $1,550.

Death by Electricity.

NEW YORK, September 2.—Darwin A. Henry, superintendent of construction for the East River Electric Light company, was instantly killed this afternoon by a charge of electricity in the company's factory. Henry was standing on a step ladder changing wires on the switchboard when suddenly he was seen to totter and then fall to the floor. The flesh on the right hand and fingers was burned to the bone. The left hand was slightly scorched and on the left elbow there was the imprint of a wire. Dr Henderson was immediately summoned from Bellevue hospital. He pronounced Henry dead, and said he had no doubt the shock caused instant death.

[illegible]

FORT MONROE, Va., September 2.—Commander A. G. Kellogg and officers of the United States steamer Ossipee were given a handsome banquet by William P. Clyde, of the City line steamers for their gallant action in rescuing the steamer Ozama from legitime sailor iiles at Port au Prince six weeks ago. A number of prominent army and navy officers and civilians were present.

Wage Troubles Settled.

JOLIET, Ill., September 2.—A conference to day of coal miners and operators resulted in the settlement of wage troubles throughout the northern Illinois coal fields, and early resumption of work, except in the mines of W. L. Scott, will probably occur.

RACE TROUBLES.

Uprisings of the Colored Population Reported.

Race Troubles in Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, September 1. This morning, between 2 and 3 o'clock an excursion train loaded with colored people arrived at Gouldsboro from Baton Rouge. A large number of colored people were at the depot waiting for it. As the train neared the depot one of the excursionists in jumping off fell. Some unknown person shouted, "Look at the black."

The negro drew a pistol and fired four or five shots in rapid succession, one of which struck a white man named William Miller. Then the shooting became general, some 400 or 500 shots being fired inside of fifteen minutes.

This account of the affair is given by the police force of Gretna. A terrible panic ensued, women and children running in all directions shouting and screaming. Levy, colored, living in Algiers, was shot in the left arm, and a colored woman named Fleming was fatally shot.

About 4 o'clock this morning a light was seen in the sky between Algiers and Jefferson parish. The Algiers fire department went to the scene and found a large number of men armed with muskets and a negro church on fire. There was no water on hand and the edifice was destroyed.

Several negroes who formed a part of the excursion party on the train were interviewed to day, and state that when nearing Gouldsboro depot it was fired on by men secreted along the line of the railroad and that as soon as the train stopped a general stampede took place.

It is very difficult to locate a single person who witnessed the beginning of the shooting outside of the police of Gretna.

Rev. Watkins, colored, residing in Gouldsboro, was shot while lying in bed at his home after the general affray, by some unknown person who had fired through the window. He was seriously wounded.

A Times-Democrat Grenada, Mississippi, special says: "A telegram was received here this morning saying the negroes were massing near Shell Mound, Le Flore county, Mississippi, and a conflict between the whites and blacks was expected. Help was called for, as the negroes outnumbered the whites six to one. A volunteer company of about forty men was raised here in an hour or two, and left on the 12:50 train for the scene of trouble, under command of J. C. Longstreet. A company of cavalry will leave here to night.

"A dispatch received here from J. C. Longstreet and C. L. Towner, asks us to send available men through the county at once.

"By order of the governor, the Winona Rifles, accompanied by several citizens, on a special train, left at 2 p. m. to day for Greenwood, from which place they will go to Shell Mound to aid in suppressing the trouble."

JACKSON, Miss., September 2. Governor Lowry arrived from Greenwood this morning, having succeeded in getting armed whites who had assembled at Greenwood to return to their homes instead of going to the scene of the threatened race war. Three military companies that left Greenwood by boat last night at 12 o'clock have not been seen or heard from, but it is not believed there will be any conflict.

A Negro Killed at Echo

PITTSBURG, Pa., September 2.—A special from Wheeling, West Virginia, says: There is a good deal of anxiety over the news of a threatened race war in New River valley, Fayette county. Information from the scene of the threatened trouble is meager, but is of such a nature as to give rise to fears that a serious breach of the peace will occur.

The trouble had its origin on Friday evening, when a negro went into a store of Berry, Cooper & Co., at Echo, and, brandishing a club, threatened to "do up" the entire force of employes. All efforts to pacify him were futile, and one of the clerks, after receiving a bad blow from the club, shot the negro, killing him instantly.

Echo is the center of a considerable colored population and last night information was received at Charleston that a mob of negroes had collected on New river and that a concerted onslaught on the whites was in contemplation. Others were also received by the Charleston hardware stores for all the Winchester rifles available and a considerable shipment of these arms was made.

The citizens of Charleston are also gathering arms, and it was apprehended that the military would be ordered out.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., September 2.—Everything is quiet on New river up to this evening. There was another lot of Winchester rifles shipped yesterday and trouble is not apprehended.

Mortgage on the White House

WASHINGTON, September 2.—There is a mortgage on the White House. H. B. Harlow, secretary and treasurer of the Mount Vernon Avenue association, speaking of the project to build a new executive mansion, said, "I am glad to see the subject agitated, and I hope it will be taken up and settled by congress. When it is our association to which the Virginia legislature has transferred its claim against the government for money borrowed by General Washington to build the present structure, will put in that claim and ask for payment for the old before commencing the new. The claim, which is for $120,000, has never been denied by the government, nor can it be, for I have the promise of the government made through Washington to pay the money back to Virginia. We will not, perhaps, ask that the claim be paid in money. But will probably suggest that congress defray the expense of building a proposed road to Mount Vernon. If they agree we will transfer the mortgage on the White House to Congress [illegible] on to the project."

A Prisoner in Ecuador

CHICAGO, September 2.—C. L. Dougherty [illegible] associated press reporter [illegible] on August 16 last, received a letter from his brother Edward C. Dougherty dated at Sea [illegible] Ecuador, stating that he had been held a close prisoner since June 1st. Mr Dougherty went to Ecuador seventeen years ago and has been engaged in various enterprises in that country. He married a niece of the president of Ecuador in [illegible] and recently has been engaged in [illegible] mining. The letter gave no reason for the imprisonment, but referred to correspondence which had been [illegible] United States Consul McGuire. No correspondence was in the letter which, it reached here and the brother thinks it was tampered with by the authorities. Cablegrams sent by Mr Dougherty from Chicago with receipt of the letter have failed to elicit any reply and he has complained to the state department.

Henry Shaw's Will.

ST. LOUIS, September 2.—The last will and testament of Henry Shaw, of Botanical Garden fame, was made public to day. The bulk of the property goes to the city of St Louis, although a number of relatives and servants are handsomely remembered. The famous garden and Tower Grove park are bequeathed to the city, to be held forever for the benefit of the public. To perpetuate the work begun by Shaw in the Botanical garden, he bequeaths a lot of property to Washington university, the income of which is to go towards the establishment and conduct of a school of botany. The worldly possessions of the deceased were between four and five million dollars.

The Exile's Return

The greatest expressions of joy were [illegible]. The king and the two chiefs who were with him gave the highest praise to Dr. Morgan, United States consul at Marshall Islands, and declare had it not been for his assistance they would have suffered severely. Malietoa is broken down in health. Mataafa will retain control of affairs for the present. Perfect amity exists between himself and Malietoa.

Army [illegible]

WASHINGTON, September 2.—With the approval of Secretary Proctor Gen. Schofield has issued the following order: "The garrisons of Ft. Laramie, Wyoming territory, Ft. Hays, Kansas, and Ft. Lyon, Colorado, will be withdrawn and the posts named be abandoned and the troops thus withdrawn assigned to other stations by the division commander. A regiment of infantry will be ordered from the department of the Missouri or the department of the Platte to take a station in the department of Texas. The commanding general of the division of the Missouri will give the necessary orders to carry the changes into effect as soon as can be with due regard to [illegible]."

An [illegible] Law.

KANSAS CITY, September 2.—Judge Boland of the police court to day handed down a decision of the test case made by the saloon men of the validity of the penalty clause of the Sunday law. The law is a city ordinance, and enables the judge to revoke the license of every saloon keeper convicted of selling liquor on Sunday. The city ordinance confers the power to revoke the license upon such judge. Judge Boland in his opinion holds that the ordinance and therefore the law is unconstitutional and dismissed the cases of fifteen saloon men. The city attorney will appeal.

Getting the Jury.

CHICAGO, September 2.—The work of getting the Cronin jury was resumed this morning. Nothing of interest developed this morning.

CHICAGO, September 2.—At the afternoon session States Attorney Longenecker presented to the court a list of questions to talesmen who have been [illegible] ted by counsel for the defense, and after some discussion Judge McConnell adjourned until to morrow that he might have time to look over the questions.

Killed by the Elixir

DAYTON, Ohio, September 2.—Samuel C. Showalter, aged 69, who voluntarily submitted to an injection of the elixir of life three weeks ago, hoping for relief from rheumatism, has died from the effects of the treatment. Immediately after injection his limbs began to swell and his whole system was [illegible] sted with blood poison, gangrene set in and flesh chipped off in flakes as large as a man's hand and he became a horrible object before death.

Light Weight Sluggers.

BARLOW, N. Y., September 2.—Jack Quinn, Scotland's light weight champion and Jack Buckley, known as the "Fulton Market boy," engaged in a prize fight near here this afternoon, London prize ring rules. The fight was Quinn's almost from the start. After the sixth round Buckley wanted to stop but the referee ordered him to go on. In the twelfth round he fell senseless on the ropes. His seconds then threw up the sponge.

[illegible]

Saturday morning he rang for a bell boy and ordered a drink of whisky, which he drank. An inquest will be held to morrow.

An investment in printer's ink is one of the best a business man can make. Now that the fall trade is beginning merchants will find it to their advantage to keep their names before the public by advertising.

The policy of the United States towards the Chinese seems to have had a serious effect upon our commerce with that country. The Manchester Union gives some interesting figures in connection with this subject which it discusses in a late number. The Union says:

That the [illegible] act of exclusion [illegible] to be regarded as [illegible] to the [illegible] by the trade figures. For the last [illegible] our trade with China has steadily [illegible] until this last year, when it [illegible] than at any time [illegible] the [illegible] show that during the year June 30, 1889, the exports of [illegible] from the United States [illegible] in value to [illegible], as against $5,917,700 in [illegible] less than [illegible] in the last twelve months. This decline is [illegible] to the [illegible] with China and is all [illegible] with [illegible] to Mongolian [illegible] over the [illegible] of the Fiftieth [illegible] the [illegible] this [illegible] The exports of [illegible] to China fell from [illegible] yards in [illegible] to [illegible] yards in [illegible]. In mineral oils, [illegible] the [illegible] period, the exports to China [illegible] from [illegible] gallons to 9,971,791.

In the column "Topics of the Time," in the Century, progress in the direction of ballot reform is thus reviewed: "The record of ballot reform legislation for the current year is one of [illegible] encouraging [illegible]. At the beginning of the year only one state, Massachusetts, had such a law on its statute books. At its [illegible] the legislatures of nine states had [illegible] comprehensive measures [illegible] resembling that of Massachusetts, seven of which were approved and became laws and two of which were defeated by executive [illegible]. The states which have [illegible] all of which are to go into effect in the near future, are, given in the order of enactment: Massachusetts, Indiana, Montana, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Minnesota, and Missouri. The two states which lost theirs through vetoes are New York and Connecticut. New York has been deprived in this way twice in succession, both times by the same governor. In Connecticut a so called secret ballot law was hurriedly passed on the last day of the session, and was approved by the governor. It is in no sense an application of the Australian system, and there is considerable doubt as to whether it will accomplish much real reform in practice. It is, however, a step in advance. In Maine, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and several other states similar laws were considered but were not passed. The seed sown by the discussion of them is certain, however, to bear fruit in the near future."

A [illegible]

LOUISVILLE, September 2.—A Courier-Journal special from Somerset, Ky., says: William Oates a prominent and wealthy farmer, residing a few miles from Monticello, left home on business with his wife and left two young daughters in charge of the house. One had in his employ a negro boy nearly full grown. Knowing the older people were away he entered, and after locking the door upon the two young girls succeeded in ravishing the youngest, aged 12. The other girl escaped from the room, and going to a neighbor's house gave the alarm. A posse was immediately organized and started in pursuit. The negro was caught in the woods and tied to a stake. A rail pen was then built around him, coal oil was poured over him and upon the rails a match was applied and the negro burned to death.

GREAT FALLS, Mont., September 2.—News has just been received here that Barker was almost totally destroyed by fire yesterday. The fire started in a miner's camp three doors below Zeigler's house and swept from there up the valley, burning all the eastern portion of the camp. It is supposed that a man named Ellis, his wife and four children lost their lives. Three men also are missing. Barker is the business centre of the entire Barker district, and is about 65 miles southeast of Great Falls.

A [illegible] Downed

DENISON, Tex., September 2.—Jim Dyer, one of the most notorious desperadoes in Indian territory, was shot and mortally wounded yesterday at the mouth of Allen river by John McIlleary. Dyer was riding up and down the river past McIlleary's house with his rifle in hand. Some words passed between the two men, when McIlleary shot Dyer. Dyer and his brothers were expelled from Texas some years ago for shooting an officer in Fannin county. They were also implicated in the murder of the sheriff of Lamar county. A mob hanged one of the brothers.

Two Stages [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO, September 2.—Wells, Fargo & Co. received information today that two of their stages were robbed, one at Bodie and the other at Forest Hill, Cal. The stage running from Bodie to Hawthorne, Nev., was stopped early this morning by a masked man, who demanded the treasure box, from which he secured $600. The passengers were not molested. Early this morning the stage from Forest Hill was also stopped five miles from Auburn by a masked man. He secured a few hundred dollars from the treasure box.

Let things alone as they are is a safer and healthier rule than its opposite ever can be. The itch for legislating a hardship or an inequality into a luxury or a superior condition threatens to become the pest of our modern times. Professor Sumner hits off the case in felicitous phrase in his book on "What Social Classes Owe to Each Other." He says: "We are [illegible] annoyed and the legislatures are kept constantly busy, by the people who have made up their minds that it is wise and conducive to happiness to live in a certain way, and who want to compel everybody else to live in their way. Some people have decided to spend Sunday in a certain way, and they want laws passed to make other people spend Sunday in the same way. Some people have resolved to be teetotalers, and they want a law passed to make everybody else a teetotaler. Some people have resolved to eschew luxury, and they want taxes laid to make others eschew luxury. The taxing power is especially something after which the reformer's finger always itches. Sometimes there is an element of self interest in the proposed reformation, and when a publisher wanted a duty imposed on books to keep Americans from reading books which would unsettle their Americanism, and when artists wanted a tax laid on pictures to save Americans from buying bad paintings."

Laissez-faire is held up as a motto, embodying the true doctrine, which Prof. Sumner bluntly translates "Mind your own business." He regards it, and rightly, as nothing but the doctrine of liberty. He would let every man be happy in his own way. If his sphere of action and interest infringes on that of any other man, there have to be compromise and adjustment. But we must wait for the occasion, instead of planning for it and anticipating it by interference. Laws and institutions have grown up as occasion has occurred for adjusting rights, and we are to let the same process continue. Minding one's own business is a sociological principle of the first importance. A grand philosophy might be developed on it as a basis.

A Tale of a St[illegible] Man.

New York Tri[illegible].

The announcement of the approaching visit to this country of Signor Salvini, the celebrated Italian actor, recalls to the writer the many pleasant chats he has had with this greatest of Othellos on the occasions of his former professional trips to this side of the Atlantic. One of the [illegible] striking impressions retained is that of the enormous power, physical as well as intellectual, of the man. From his boyhood he was noted for his extreme muscular vigor, which an anecdote he himself [illegible] related will serve to illustrate.

When he was a student at college there was, as is often the case in other countries besides Italy, a constant warfare waged between the students and the town people. At one time lads had arrayed against them, on account of some real or fancied insult, all the butchers and butcher lads of the place. The latter were not allowed by the authorities to carry knives or stilettos so they sharpened their whetting steels at the point until they made of them most formidable weapons. Armed with these, they one evening attacked a body of students, among whom was the youthful Salvini, who did yeoman's work for his comrades, and bowled over with his fists one butcher lad after another.

At length he found himself face to face with the leader, and the others paused a moment to watch the result of what was in reality a duel between the champions of the respective parties. Salvini, after a few passes aimed a tremendous blow with his clenched fist at his adversary's head, the latter at the same moment struck upward with the murderous steel, the weapon, needle pointed, passed clean through Salvini's wrist, and struck immovably in bone and muscle. But this did not seem to stop the downward sweep of the youngster's arm. The mighty fist descended carrying with it the steel and struck the butcher so terrible a blow that he was knocked senseless, and had to be carried to the hospital. The trace of the wound can be seen in Salvini's wrist to-day.

Like most strong men Salvini is fond of recounting the feats of strength performed by others, and especially he used to dilate on the extraordinary nerve and strength of a Venetian mason and builder whom he had known. Some time ago so interesting were the tales he told of this man Signor Salvini was asked to jot down what he could remember of the stories he had told, and this is in substance what he wrote.

"The name of the man about whom you ask was Luchini. He died a few years ago in Venice at an advanced age, but up to the last preserved much of his extraordinary strength. He was by trade a mason, and though not rich, was always in comfortable circumstances. His strength was allied to [illegible] presence of mind and coolness under trying circumstances. Once, for instance, he was carrying out to a villa he was building, [illegible] miles from Venice, a large sum of money, with which to pay off his workmen. He carried the money, which was in silver coin in a bag over his shoulder, though it would have taken two ordinary men even to lift it.

"At night he found himself some distance from his destination, and so was obliged to 'put up' at a small inn. He went to bed early, placing the bag of silver in the bottom drawer of a small chest of drawers in the bedroom. About midnight he was awakened by a rough shake of the shoulder, and, opening his eyes, saw by the light of a small oil lamp two of his own workmen each of whom had in his hand a stiletto, the uncomfortably sharp points of which were pressed against either side of his throat.

"Luchini grasped the situation instantly and saw that he was in a position where his enormous strength availed him but little, so he coolly said, 'What do you want?' 'The money,' was the answer. 'Where is it?' 'Take it,' said Luchini, 'it is in that drawer,' and he pointed to the chest of drawers. One of the ruffians remained to guard the recumbent Luchini while the other went to the drawer indicated and tried to open it. It would not budge. 'Give me the key,' he growled. 'It is not locked,' announced Luchini. 'Open it, then,' said the robber, and still with the stiletto at his throat Luchini rose, and with one hand pulled open the drawer the other could not even budge with all his strength.

"At the men's bidding he then pulled out the bag of money and threw it on the floor. One of the thieves then began to fill his pockets with loose coin so as to lighten somewhat the weight of the bag. At the sight of the glitter of coin the other's avarice outstripped his prudence. Withdrawing his poniard from Luchini's throat, he bent down and burrowed his hands in the pile of money and began to follow his comrade's example.

"The looked for opportunity had come for Luchini. He calmly stooped forward, grasped one of the robbers by the hair in either hand and then spreading out his arms and bringing them together again with incredible force, he crushed in the two men's skulls as if they had been egg shells. They were dead without a groan. Hearing a noise at the window Luchini then looked out and saw that a third scoundrel was keeping watch outside. Taking up one of the dead men in one hand he opened the casement, and calling out 'There's something for you' he pitched the dead robber at the living one with such force that the [illegible] almost to death but was seriously hurt and limped off as fast as a fractured leg would allow him. Luchini went back to bed and calmly slept till morning."

SHIP SIGNALING AT SEA.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE COMING CONFERENCE AT WASHINGTON.

The Art of Communicating Between Vessels on the Ocean Has Been Brought to a Very Fine Point and It Will Be Still Further Improved.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Aug. [illegible].—"Practically it is entirely safe to go to sea in a first class steamship of today," said Lorian Blow, of the United States hydrographic office the other day, "excepting for one thing. The danger of fire is substantially done away with for the appliances are so perfect that with a large crew there is no difficulty in subduing any conflagration that may start. The ships that are built nowadays will outlive any storm, even a hurricane and there is no danger of a ship built with compartments sinking from any ordinary leak. The one peril which is not yet avoided is that of collision. Nothing that has yet been contrived enables the most careful navigator to rest free from anxiety on that point."

This utterance is one that is echoed by any and all sea captains who will talk on the subject. They declare that nothing remains to make sea going practically as safe as any land travel excepting to do away with the danger of collision, and it is therefore comforting to know that practical steps have been taken toward solving this important problem. Some time ago the president of the United States issued a circular letter to all the maritime nations of the world, inviting them to send delegates to a convention to be held in Washington for the purpose of considering this very question. England at first refused, and for some time hung back, and, as a matter of course, no conference that should be held without her cooperation would be of any great importance. At length, however, the English government reconsidered the question and appointed her delegates. Nearly all the other nations followed her example and the conference is to be held in the coming fall.

That it is much needed no one who is at all conversant with maritime matters will question for a moment. The number of vessels actually sunk by collision in the world runs not far from 200 each year, and statistics show that even this large number is increasing from year to year.

The conference will discuss many questions bearing on the subject of safety at sea, but, as is suggested above, their main work will be directed to the use of signals for the purpose of avoiding collisions, that being universally conceded to be the principal danger now encountered by the mariner. They are expected, therefore, to adopt a uniform system of marine signals or other means of plainly [illegible] the direction in which vessels are moving in fog, mist, falling snow and thick weather, and at night. To their [illegible] of this subject will be attracted the most public attention.

As a matter of course, in order to avoid bringing his own vessel into collision with another, the [illegible] know where that other is, and at the same time inform the master of the other vessel of his own whereabouts. In the case of derelicts this is manifestly impossible, and consequently the derelict inspires [illegible] terror than any other source of peril at sea. It presents the only danger which cannot be foreseen, against which no precaution is adequate. So long as there are ships it is likely that this peril will remain. There [illegible] to be no reason, however, why a system of communication cannot be devised which will enable vessels [illegible] to inform one another of their whereabouts even in a fog or on the darkest nights. Everybody knows that there is a system now in use [illegible] by which it is [illegible] that this shall be done. Not everybody knows, though, that this system is radically defective and in some [illegible]. Manifestly the only way to communicate at sea is by signals to the eye or to the ear. Experiments are constantly being made in the hope of developing the possibility of telegraphing through the water, and it has been claimed that messages have been sent and received in this way. No practically valuable results have yet been attained in this direction, however, though it would be foolish in this day to deny the probability of electricity being the ultimate solution of the whole question.

For the present the only possible reliance is on the perception of the eye and ear, and this is reached in a few ways only. Flags and similar contrivances, such as balls hung like flags, lights, whistles or horns or sirens, guns and bells are the only means in use outside of the system of motions known as "wig-wag."

Wig-wag is a set of motions to be [illegible] by a man in sight, but out of hearing of another man, by which words can be conveyed. The [illegible] stands in an open space, and holding in one hand, or in each hand, some object, like a flag, a cap, a stick, anything he can get, which the eye will readily follow. Swinging this in certain ways he can talk in the Morse alphabet, by dots and dashes, while the movements are indicated by certain [illegible] arbitrarily [illegible] and agreed upon. This system is officially recognized by the army and navy of the United States and England, and is in use also in the [illegible] service of both countries. It is simple and [illegible] when circumstances allow of the two men [illegible] each other. In the dark or in a fog, of course, it is [illegible] at night and under favorable circumstances [illegible] may be had with lanterns under this system.

Lights, also [illegible] or nearly so in a fog, are the main reliance of the mariner in trying to locate the vessel he may encounter at night. International law fixes the manner in which [illegible] shall carry [illegible] lights, and a penalty of $200 is fixed by act of congress for any violation of the regulations. These rules prescribe that all ocean going steamers and steamers [illegible] shall carry at the foremast [illegible] a bright white light of such [illegible] to be visible on a dark night, with a [illegible] at a distance of at least five miles, and so constructed as to show a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of twenty points of the compass ten points on each side of [illegible] to two points abaft the beam on either side.

In addition to the white light [illegible] the [illegible] carry on the starboard side a green light and on the port side a red light, which must be visible at least two miles, and must show a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of ten points, namely, from dead ahead to two points abaft the beam. These side lights must be screened so as not to be visible across the bow.

No better arrangement than this has been [illegible], but a little reflection will show that this is very inadequate and unsatisfactory. Supposing that on a dark night the master of a vessel sees a red and a white light. He knows that he is looking at the port side of a vessel, but of course he [illegible] tell how far off she is, [illegible] tell whether she is [illegible] directly toward or [illegible] own ship or whether she is actually traveling away from him.

Similar regulations are applied to the cases of other vessels, so that, according as the lookout sees white lights, red lights or green lights, he can judge whether he is encountering an ocean going steamer, a towing steamer, a vessel laying telegraph cable, a sailing vessel, a pilot vessel, or some small craft. Flare lights are also used at intervals by certain vessels but in actual practice it is found that even when the regulations are strictly followed as they generally are, mistakes are often made by the observer.

These international regulations also prescribe that in case of fog, steam vessels under way shall sound a steam whistle at intervals of not more than one minute. Sail vessels under way must sound a fog horn at intervals of not more than five minutes, and steam and sail vessels not under way must sound a bell at intervals of not more than five minutes. Other craft, such as a canal boat or a raft, must sound a fog horn or some equivalent signal which must make a sound equal to a steam whistle at intervals of not more than two minutes. This is of course a most desirable protection from the danger of collision, but as a matter of fact experience shows that these noises do not tell the listener how far off is the vessel signaling, nor, if the fog is heavy, in what direction she is.

Signals of various kinds may be and are given by long and short blasts of the whistle. The only ones prescribed in the rules quoted aside from the fog signals just specified are one, two and three short blasts. The first means, "I am directing my course to starboard;" the second, "I am directing my course to port," and the third, "I am going full speed astern." The use of these signals is optional, but the regulations say that if they are used, the vessel's course must be in accordance with the signal made. Nevertheless a custom obtains with many commanders of using three [illegible] to mean, "I am towing something."

Guns and rockets are also used as signals, but, excepting in the navy under special circumstances, they are signals of distress and are not used otherwise.

Such, in outline, is the only system known by which the master of a vessel can learn the facts on which depend the safety of his ship, and possibly the lives of all on board. That it falls far short of the requirements of modern commerce goes without saying, even in the comprehension of the landsmen, and among seamen the wonder is, not that a world's conference is now to be held, but that it was not held many years ago. For not only has the danger long been realized, but various intelligent and well directed efforts have been made to provide the remedy.

Quite a number of years ago Capt. Griffin, of the Pacific Mail steamship service, who had given much study to the subject, prepared an elaborate (possibly too elaborate, though it was simple, too) code of signals, which he offered to the world for universal adoption. For it is evident that any code, to be of use to any one, must be understood and followed by all. His plan was studied and favorably received by many shipmasters, but nothing was done toward the adoption of it.

Later—it was about 1880—Capt. Backer, of the United States prepared another code which was still more favorably received. It was investigated by some of the great transatlantic companies whose experts approved it. It was laid before the British admiralty and board of trade, and by both these bodies was favorably considered. Still nothing was done until by act of congress in 1888 the president was authorized to call the present conference.

As a matter of course, no intelligent captain is without his own ideas of what should be done to improve the system, and as the conference will invite suggestions, it is likely that many wise and possibly some foolish ideas will be presented for their consideration. Some suggestions, however, have been made by mariners who stand high in their profession, and [illegible] well worthy of adoption.

It is noticeable that all insist on the code being made as simple as possible. There is no time for anything but the barest [illegible] when a collision is imminent. It is suggested that eight distinct signals of some sort [illegible] possible, one for each fourth point of the compass, N., N. E., E., S. E., S., S. W., W. and N. W. Further suggestions are that there should be a standard of power for the whistles, horns, etc. Whistles are made that can be heard eight miles, but many are in use that cannot be heard more than two miles. It is also urged that the intervals between signals in case of fogs should be made less, that the whistle should be placed at the bow of a vessel where its wave sounds will carry best, and that the regulation about "moderate speed," if it is retained, should be made more definite. By the present code [illegible] is not prescribed. [illegible]

The Only M[illegible] To Col[illegible]

Balt[illegible] Letter.

Baltimore is the [illegible] of the only monument in this country to the memory of the discoverer of America. Strange to say, it was set up by a foreigner, the first French consul to the port of Baltimore. He was an eccentric man, possessed of great wealth and an ardent admirer of Columbus. The existence of this monument is not generally known, and it has particular interest now in view of the [illegible] importance of the coming exposition of the Three Americas. It stands upon an elevated plateau on the lawn attached to the Samuel Ready Female Orphan asylum, at the intersection of East Fourth avenue and the Harford road. It was erected nearly a century ago, yet it is in a fine state of preservation after having withstood the storms of so many years. It is the design of the management of the asylum to appropriately decorate the monument in October, 1892, the time of the great exposition of three Americas, as a help to emphasize the circumstances under which it was erected. The monument is built of brick said to have been imported from England or France. At first it was covered with plaster, but it has since received a coating of cement by the Ready asylum trustees. It is quadrangular in form, and slopes from a base of six and a half feet in diameter to two and a half feet at the top, and is about fifty feet high.

Texas Siftings.

The rising generation of colored youth in the south is far from being polite and obsequious. On the contrary there is a manifest disposition to put on airs. Not long ago an elegantly dressed white gentleman rode his horse up to the sidewalk in front of an Austin (Texas) hotel, dismounted, and, snapping his fingers at a light mahogany colored youth said: "Here boy! Hold this horse while I go into this drug store for a minute." "Am dat ar hoss so [illegible] dat hit takes two men ter hold him?" "Of course it don't take two men to hold him," replied the white gentleman. "Den ef one man can hold him what does yer want me for? Why don't yer hold him yer s'f?"

ZANZIC.

Wonderful Career Which the Famous Magician Led in the Last Few Years of His Life—Two Tours Around the World and Once a Captive of the King of Burmah.

Yes, [illegible] Harry Zanzic, the magician who [illegible] at the Colorado Springs opera house Wednesday and Thursday, September 4th and 5th, is a native of [illegible] before the public [illegible]. He is a gentleman of brilliant attainments and is a fine linguist and the best [illegible] is unmatched. Mr. Zanzic has had a wonderful life. He has made two tours of the world appearing in nearly every country where there is any degree of civilization in the world. The potentates of nearly all the European and Asiatic countries and the emperor of Brazil have been mystified by his marvelous [illegible] nearly every [illegible] In 1878 [illegible] at Rangoon, Burmah, the magician and his company received an invitation to appear before the king of Mandalay to teach the [illegible] was necessary [illegible] up the Irrawaddy, a distance [illegible] hundred miles, which was done [illegible] small steamer. The voyage was charmingly picturesque, leading as it did by scores of villages and towns with golden spires [illegible] rising up and glistening in the dazzling sunlight. At Mandalay the company was met by a royal escort at the steamer's landing, the baggage packed on elephants and the people were likewise mounted and were taken to the palace of the king. In the outer chamber of the palace they were ordered to remove their shoes, which was done. After two hours detention they were escorted through courtyards and magnificent apartments into a large audience chamber where a temporary stage had been fitted up. After fitting up their properties for a performance, screens were set up at the farther end of the room from the stage, and beyond this the king and queen were seated where they could see and not be seen, all others in the hall including noblemen and officials knelt upon the floor with noses fairly into the floor. The interpreter to the court sent word that the performers must kneel also and only upon explaining that they could not give the performance unless permitted to stand, they were then ordered to appear on their feet before the king and queen. After the performance the court interpreter informed the performers that his majesty was so well pleased that he would permit the conjuror to gaze on his face, a delicacy in that country, the screen was pushed aside and revealed his majesty reclining in his dais, he chatted pleasantly through the interpreter, and marveled at the exhibition given by the magician. His majesty expressed a desire that Zanzic should remain as court conjuror, and he would give him and his assistants a palace for their special entertainment. Zanzic informed the king that he could not remain with him. He then insisted that some of his people be taught the art of magic and become magicians. He was informed that also was impossible. His royal highness then insisted that the magician should remain, and gave orders that he should not be permitted to leave the palace, and that he should be supplied with every luxury and comfort for many days. The king could not be induced to countermand his former orders and Zanzic was literally a prisoner in the most gorgeous and magnificent palace of the orient. He was treated with the greatest consideration and kindness. By begging, praying and threatening, with the intervention of an American missionary, who informed the king there would be trouble unless his petted prisoner was allowed to depart as freely as he came, was the magician given his liberty. A promise was given and extracted that Mr. Zanzic return to the palace again and a cabinet was retained as a hostage. Upon departing the king paid the conjuror 5000 rubies and made the party handsome presents of gold and embroidery work. While confined as princely prisoners, the party were shown the Sacred White Elephant, which, Mr. Zanzic says, was not nearly as white a specimen as that exhibited by P. T. Barnum. The pachyderm was covered with silk and gold cloth, and fed from dishes of silver and gold and two priests were constantly in attendance upon his wants. The promise to revisit Burmah has never been fulfilled, for the fortunes of the unstable throne have been such that the pledge is no longer binding. The cabinet was discovered some time ago by the English in the palace of the king where it was considered a treasure of great value.

BASE BALL.

The Crowells [illegible] the Jack[illegible] in a Good [illegible] of Ball.

"Blue hats" and "white caps" were prominent on the streets yesterday afternoon, the occasion being the annual ball game between the Jackson and Crowell hose companies. When "play ball" was called there was a good sized audience to witness the game at the Athletic grounds. From the start it was a foregone conclusion that the Crowells had the best of it, and the way they kept No. 2 chasing the ball was amusing. There were very fine plays made on both sides. Marcus Couch, of the Crowells, played like a professional and did some good work at short. For the Jacksons, De Witt at short and Stovell behind the bat, did fine playing. They will [illegible] bats again next year when the public will be treated to another grand ovation. The following is the official score:

Alderman J. P. Barnes moved that a contract be made with the El Paso Electric Light company for lighting the city for one year at the rate now paid. After a good deal of discussion as to whether it would not be possible to make a contract for a longer term at a cheaper rate the motion was carried.

On motion of Alderman Gillingham the city marshal was ordered to have all posts and other obstructions on Tejon street within the business portion of the city removed. Alderman Lawton later asked a reconsideration of this motion. He said he had seconded it, but had misunderstood it when first read. The motion was finally amended to cover posts only.

Chairman J. P. Barnes, of the water committee, said a scheme had been found by which the water supply could be greatly increased but the committee did not think best to make the scheme public at present. He, however, said that the committee did not feel at liberty to proceed without some expression from the council on the subject. On motion of Alderman Sprague a resolution, expressing the confidence of the council in the water committee was adopted and council then adjourned.

A Talented Actress

The charming emotional actress Rose Coghlan, who has attained great popularity in America, was inspired to adopt the stage as a profession by the success of her brother, and after the usual hard work and tribulation she achieved the position of leading lady of a provincial theatre in England at the age of eighteen, subsequently touring the provinces as leading lady with Barry Sullivan and [illegible] all the opposite roles in his extensive repertoire. Her excellent work gained her a London engagement the following year, where she became leading lady of a prominent metropolitan theatre. She afterwards made her first visit to America with the late E. A. Sothern and was at once engaged by Lester Wallack for his New York theatre, where she soon became a favorite, creating such a favorable impression by her magnificent performance of Peg Woffington, in "Masks and Faces," that she has since been styled "Gotham's Peg." Miss Coghlan, since her departure from the Wallack company four years ago, starred in several successful plays, leaving her starring tour temporarily to accept a large salary for the last season of the celebrated Wallack company, after which engagement she entered into a three years' contract with Manager Augustus Pitou, who purchased her brother's very powerful play, "Jocelyn," in which she is at present starring with great success. No actress has a firmer hold upon the hearts of the American public than Rose Coghlan, and in the charming role of Jocelyn she has added greatly to her excellent reputation.
